Duration: 31th July - 11th August 2023

Working time (hours a day): 3

Number of ECTS credits: 4

Teaching Method: Film Analysis, Group Discussions, Role-playing Exercises, Film Critique, Language Immersion Activities

Module Description:

This module aims to explore how films can be used to investigate linguistic and cultural identities. Films are an excellent tool to understand how different cultures express themselves through language, art, music, and other forms of creative expression. This module will examine various films from different cultures and languages and analyze how they reflect cultural and linguistic identities.

The module will begin by introducing the concept of cultural and linguistic identity and the role of films in representing and shaping these identities. Students will explore films from different cultures and languages and learn how to analyze them for their cultural and linguistic content. They will examine how language and other elements of culture are represented in the films and how these representations contribute to our understanding of cultural identity.

In addition to film analysis, this module will also include discussions and activities that encourage students to reflect on their own cultural and linguistic identities. Through group discussions, students will explore how their own cultural and linguistic backgrounds have shaped their identity and how they relate to others from different backgrounds.
